

05/30/2017 In Response to Pat Buchanan's "After the Confederates, Who's Next"?
Pat,

If one's hunger for knowledge lacks any desire to work for the satisfaction of that hunger, then one needs no other substance, in one's diet, then propaganda. And sad to say this is where we are today due to, what President Regan stated as "An Act of War" on our Education System. If one really wants to research the purpose of the Civil War, read the letters back and forth from both sides. One will find an overwhelming consensus that both sides thought they were doing God's work. Lincoln himself, and I paraphrase him, When asked by a Union Soldier if he thought that God was on our side, (read the North) Lincoln replied that he was not sure but he had hoped and prayed that we were on the side of God. Some 630,000 deaths occurred in that war, the most American casualties ever in any war in our history, and Lincoln did not know if what he was doing was God's work? All those statues of Civil War Confederates that they are tearing down were, for the most part, if not all, people who believed that they were on the side of God. Unfortunately, the Victors write history and what was propaganda during the civil war, is the same propaganda 152 years later.

Who's next? Any and every God Fearing individual that believes in God's Plan for Mankind. And by Who? Any and Every individual that believes in Mankind's plan for God.
