

June 15th 2015, To: Pat Buchanan

Dear Abby,

I have a family problem I'm dealing with. I am in a business that in order to survive relies on money coming from another business I do not want to mention the company by name so I will call it the BB Corporation. The head of BB wants his son to marry my daughter. However my daughter does not want to marry his son. He threatens to have the BB Corporation stop doing business with me unless I override my daughter's desires. Most of my Colleagues need his money to work in my business. Their jobs as well as mine would be in danger unless I obey his wishes. My daughter has always followed my directive but I have to say my mother-in-law is against the marriage and my daughter is leaning toward my mother –in-law's position. I wish not to offend my mother-in law but I feel I need to comply with BB's CEO's wishes. My business and my friend's jobs, as well as our high standard of living, are at risk. I feel that for her marry his son is in all our best interests. How can I get my daughter and mother in –law to come to their senses?

Thanks,

Sobbing John from Ohio

Dear Sobbing John from Ohio, Please pass this on to your wife.

“Dear Mrs. Sobbing John, Divorce the idiot, take your daughter, and move in with your mother”.

Abby